not plush but it works like a charm

is it very comfortable ? no, it's a bit painful in your ears after while. the good news is, it only took about a minute to figure out that it was the alternator bearing making that annoying whine. at the end of the day, this thing is cheap, guaranteed for life and it gets the job done and i can not take away a star based on the discomfort... maybe i have weird ears ?

Does what it should and the price was right -- I used this to pinpoint a faulty fuel injector. I tried using a long screwdriver pressed up to my ear but it just doesn't compare to an actual stethoscope. If you can't figure out where "that noise" is coming from then grab this to help with diagnosis.

I bought this because I couldn't find the other one I know I purchased via Amazon (of course, after I got this one and used it, I found the other) The other is Lisle 52500 Mechanic's Stethoscope. The Lisle seems to be of higher quality. I had difficulty getting the ear buds of the Powerbuilt inserted to the point where I could accurately hear. They work, but they're not great.

Cheap and worth every penny

November 11, 2017

It feels really flimsy but it works well. I'm a home mechanic so I don't need to rely on this every day, and it works better at isolating noises than listening through a length of heater hose. For the price I'm glad to have it but I won't be surprised when it breaks in my tool box.

they work really well... the only bumner part was that the threads on the rod extension are too small and the extension just wobbles and falls off. I ended up wrapping the threads with thread tape and cranked the extension on there. It stayed without wobbling after that. I would probably just JB Weld it on or something similar that is a solid epoxy.

Agree with other reviewers, it does feel a bit cheap but what can you expect for under $6? It functions well. Perfect for occasional use around the house or vehicles.

Better quality than one I got at harbor freight and cheaper than off any of the tool trucks.
